Squarish in shape, the province of New Brunswick is bordered on the top by the Quebec boundary and the Bay of Chaleur, on the bottom by the Bay of Fundy looking toward Nova Scotia, on the left by the State of Maine and on the right by the Gulf of St. Lawrence, with Prince Edward Island lying close in. During its long history, it has developed its agricultural areas and its industries, but New Brunswick still has large tracts of virgin forest and its streams—like the famous Restigouche, Miramachi and Matapedia—bring sportsmen from far away to fish for salmon. This great holiday land is accessible from the lines of the Canadian National Railways.
