In the Canadian Rockies

Snow-capped mountains; deep velvet-carpeted valleys; tumbling streams; steep waterfalls; pine-clad slopes; the sharp staccato bark of locomotive exhausts; musical echoes from whistles; glimpses of wild life — mile upon mile of rugged peaks thrusting into the blue sky — these are yours when you ride the transcontinental main line of the Canadian Pacific through The Rockies.

The six hundred miles between Calgary and Vancouver include the Rocky and Selkirk Ranges. Both afford sheer scenic beauty that is not excelled in any day's journey. Rushing rivers in the Kicking Horse Pass and Fraser Canyon; the magnificent Yoho Valley; the Big Hill at Field; the fabulous Spiral Tunnels; in these are a real mountain adventure — enjoyed from the comfort of air-conditioned cars.

Loveliest in summer, the Canadian Rockies are filled with beauty at every season. Wild flowers herald the spring, deep snows accentuate evergreens in winter. Nature's paint brush brightens the autumn scene with reds, yellows and browns like these in the Kicking Horse Canyon.
