Reducing Waste

SECRETARY of Commerce, H. C. Hoover, recently said: "An examination by our Engineering Council concluded that industrial wastes amounted to fully 30 per cent of our national effort—that is, we could lift the standards of living by 30 per cent if they could be eliminated. * * * I can perhaps illustrate what we mean by elimination of industrial waste. We have had a fine demonstration in our railways during the last three years. During this period our railways have handled a 14 per cent increase in freight at no material increase in gross operating expense. There has been a decrease in rates of over 5 per cent, the hours of the workers employed have diminished rather than increased, and the wage has slightly increased. Service to the community has been immeasurably improved. The great national losses of a few years ago by car shortages and their resultant strangulation of commerce and industry, with the inevitable inflation of price and the speculation which flowed from it, have been largely eliminated."

During the same period the Great Northern Railway handled an increase in freight of 17.6 per cent, with a decrease in freight proportion of total operating expenses of 6.6 per cent.

This has been accomplished by great effort in management, by great cooperation between all departments of the railroad, by efforts of the employees, and also by the cooperation of the communities served by the railroad.
