

Electrified in the Cascades

WILD FLOWERS

FLOWERS are the most expressive things in all of Nature's handiwork. They mean everything that is beautiful and sweet—joy to the sick, comfort and hope in sorrow and faith to the one you love.

There are the proud and pampered garden flowers, tended by loving hands, fostered to the highest degree of growth and form, given every opportunity to show to best advantage. They are grown in beautiful beds in perfect harmony of design, color and variety, commanding the admiration of everyone. They are beautiful indeed.

But there is no flower like the wild flower, growing in its native state, fighting alone for its existence, no security of life, servant to the will and whim of its mother Nature.

Glacier National Park is a "million acre wild flower garden." Here are myriad flowers, 100 kinds or more, growing in reckless abandon in every nook and corner of this glorious summer playground. There is no set design here, no spot or place for one particular kind; you will find them all in brilliant multi-colored patches along the slopes of great mountains, you will see them on the high vantage places, next to the snowline, wonder how they exist there, peeping out from under rocks and crevassed places or even pushing up through the lighter snows to greet the warming sun of a blue Montana sky. Far below in the valleys they are everywhere, distance-blended into the exquisite colorings of a luxuriant rug from far-off Persia. And, too, along the trails, their sweet fragrance is wafted to you on the cooling mountain breezes.

Prairie Farmer Trip to Adventure Land

Breakfast

TUESDAY, AUGUST 19, 1930

« »

CANTALOUPE

PEACHES AND CREAM

FRESH PLUMS IN SYRUP

OATMEAL

SHREDDED WHEAT

SMOKED HAM

BREAKFAST BACON

EGGS TO ORDER

CALF'S LIVER

HASHED BROWN POTATOES

GRIDDLE CAKES
MAPLE SYRUP

DRY OR BUTTERED TOAST
ORANGE MARMALADE

BRAN MUFFINS

COFFEE

TEA

COCOA

MILK

POST

CARD

TWO CENT
STAMP
HERE

Message

THE Great Northern Railway bids you welcome to the Pacific Northwest and sincerely trusts that your journey over its route from the Twin Cities to the Pacific Coast Cities will be a pleasant one.

Lake McDonald Hotel, Glacier National Park

