THRU THE ROCKIES . . . NOT AROUND THEM

Colorado's Highest Mountains

IN and out of a dozen saloons and gambling places poured roughly clad miners. Big Bill rode the crest of the wave of excitement and revelry which gripped the night. Only a few months before he had seen the first panning of gold in California Gulch. Tonight, as he pressed on towards his favorite gambling joint, he clutched a poke of yellow dust panned that day from his own placer claim. "It orter last me a few hours with them poker sharks," he speculated, hefting the bag. A month's panning for a few hours of excitement. Such was the philosophy of Leadville in the heydays of '59.

Jostled by the mob, a pale young fellow swayed suddenly into the arms of the miner. "Pardon me," he said, weakly. Quick to spot a tenderfoot and down-and-outer, Big Bill experienced one of those queer humorous quirks typical of a miner flushed with success. Himself assuming a pathetically grotesque, discouraged expression, he whined, "Hey, Bud, could you spare me a buck or two? I'm busted flat." The young fellow's cheeks flushed with embarrassment. He opened a flat wallet. Into his tired voice crept a note of futility. "Here," he said, "It's my last," and handed the joking miner a five dollar gold piece. "Well, I'll be damned," muttered Bill. He was taken aback by this unselfish gesture from a "busted" stranger. Suddenly he thrust his poke of dust into the other's hands. "Here, kid," he roared, "Here's your change," and Big Bill elbowed hurriedly away to be lost in the crowd. There was nearly $2000 worth of gold dust in the dirty little bag.

In the shadows of Mount Elbert (14,431 feet) and Mount Massive (14,418 feet), Leadville, the "Cloud City" and roaring mining camp in the days of '59, still carries on the mining of at least nine different metals. Here, after the rich placer strikes in 1858 and 1859, the Little Jonny, Climax and other discoveries, produced fabulous fortunes. Here "Baby Doe," widow of the spectacular silver king, H. A. W. Tabor, kept lonely vigil for a quarter of a century. In the old shaft house of the abandoned Matchless Silver Mine she waited for a return of riches. Baby Doe has gone, but the great treasure vaults of the Leadville region continue to yield rich returns through modern mining methods.

The rails of the Denver & Rio Grande reached the famous mining camp in 1880. The line was immediately pushed over Tennessee Pass, 10,240 feet above sea level, and crossed the Continental Divide to complete the famous Royal Gorge Route of the Scenic Limited.

Mount Elbert is the second highest peak and Mount Massive shares with Mount Ranier, of Washington, the distinction of being third highest peak in the United States. These magnificent mountains rise 4000 feet above Leadville, to dominate one of the most rugged mountain regions in the world.
