Rails Thru the Rockies

Vital link in the direct, central transcontinental route, the Rio Grande's two main lines cut directly through the spectacular Colorado Rockies, joining at Dotsero, the entrance to beautiful Glenwood Canyon of the Colorado River.

Eighteen miles west of this point, at the junction of the Roaring Fork, the favorite resort town of Glenwood Springs nestles in a mountain pocket surrounded by towering peaks.

The cover scene depicts one of the striking vistas to be seen from Glenwood Springs, with stately Mt. Sopris dominating a scene of Autumnal beauty.

As a recreational area, the Glenwood Springs region is unexcelled. The world's largest natural warm water open-air pool offers swimming the year 'round. Summer-time diversions include hiking, riding, fishing, golf. Autumn brings big-game hunters after deer, elk and bear. And in winter, the area offers some of the finest ski courses in the world.

In every season of the year, as the "silv'ry Colorado" flows steadily through its rocky canyons and fertile valleys, so, too, the constant flow of the nation's commerce rolls smoothly over gleaming steel rails—straight through the heart of the majestic Rockies.
