Rio Grande

Main Line Thru the Rockies

Pictured on the other side of the envelope is the California Zephyr—"the most talked about train in the Country"—shown ascending the face of the front range of the Colorado Rockies. From this vantage point, the Great Plains to the east spread out in a magnificent panorama. After passing through a series of tunnels carved from the colorful sandstones of the area, the main line swings westward for the spectacular climb to the lofty Continental Divide.

The Chicago-San Francisco California Zephyr is the favorite train of experienced travelers—the only transcontinental train specifically designed and scheduled for sightseeing. Its five Vista-Domes provide matchless traveling loge seats to view the beauties of Colorado's rugged mountains, which it traverses in daylight hours.

For a unique travel thrill of a different kind, ride The Silverton—last of the West's steam-powered narrow-gauge trains. The Silverton operates daily during the summer season through the breath-taking Animas Canyon between Durango and Silverton, reliving the glory days of pioneer railroading in the Rockies.
