Dale Nichols

Dale Nichols has both his feet on solid ground—the soil he has learned to love on his father's Nebraska farm and, later on, to paint with care and deliberation. It's this down-to-earth super-realism, the gift of penetrating observation teamed with the power of romantic expression, that has given his pictures distinction and won his name international acclaim. Dale Nichols' paintings can be found in many private and public collections including the Metropolitan Museum in New York, the Art Institute of Chicago and the University of Illinois.
