

One of the most beautiful rivers in all the world is the Columbia River, which forms the boundary, for the most part, between Oregon and Washington. Discovered in May, 1792 by an American trader and sea captain, Robert Gray of Boston, it was named by him after his ship the "Columbia," the first vessel to anchor in its inland waters.

Forty miles east of Portland, at Bonneville, the mighty river has been harnessed with the completion of Bonneville Dam. This engineering project makes hydro-electric power available to a vast area in the Columbia River region and will permit navigation by ocean-going vessels as far east as The Dalles.

One of the interesting and unique features of Bonneville Dam are the fishways designed to permit salmon to ascend the Columbia to their spawning grounds. Bonneville Dam may be seen from the Union Pacific Milwaukee Road trains, which skirt the Columbia River for over two hundred miles. Through the verdant Columbia River valley you travel past the foot of sheer walls one moment; next the sweeping breast of the river lies before you. Mile after mile your train threads along the river, now in the shadows of soaring cliffs, then past garden-like islands, foaming cataracts and waterfalls.

The history and development of the entire Pacific Northwest has been closely linked with this sometimes calm, sometimes angry waterway. However, the last chapter in this story has not been written, for the mighty Columbia will continue down through the ages to exert a powerful influence on the welfare of the territory it drains.
