

Outstanding in a city where the "un-usual" is common is Grauman's Chinese Theatre. It is, perhaps, one of the best known buildings in the world for rare indeed is the movie fan who has not heard of it and longed to be present at one of the gala motion picture premieres held there. The architecture carries out the Chinese motif, and in the famous forecourt is a grove of palm trees and other shrubs, also concrete slabs bearing the hand and foot prints of famous movie stars and their messages of congratulations.

While Hollywood is known as the "Home of the Moving Picture Industry" it is also famous as the home of Hollywood Bowl, where "Symphonies under the Stars" have been held yearly since 1922. Many special events are also presented there and it is the site annually of Easter sunrise services, attended by thousands, and broadcast to the world.

Within recent years Hollywood has grown in importance as a radio and television center and many national network programs now originate there. Hollywood and its neighbors Westwood Village and Beverly Hills have some of the finest department stores, smart shops and restaurants in the country. Westwood Village embraces the campus of the University of California at Los Angeles.
