

Few people indeed have not heard or read about San Francisco's famous Chinatown, and nearly everyone plans some day to visit it. There within a few compact city blocks upwards of 21,000 persons—many of them native-born, some foreign-born—live and carry on their business activities. Chinatown has no squalid features, but is modern and progressive, and gives the visitor a view of the best the Orient has to offer. Many of the older generation still wear the oriental garb.

This area adjoins the best business section of San Francisco and is easy of access, friendly to all who come. Its buildings have an oriental touch and its shops and fine stores are filled with treasures from China.

East Meets West—Modern skyscrapers of the Occident look down on a corner of transplanted Orient in San Francisco's Chinatown.
