

People who have not experienced the thrill of a vacation on a Western "Dude Ranch" find it difficult to get a clear picture of what such an outing really means. In the West nearly every farm is a "ranch" that engages in both farming and the grazing and feeding of live stock. In the Union Pacific West there are many such ranches that take paying guests (honorably referred to as "Dudes") and provide them with all the facilities for a vacation in the real Western outdoors. Hence they are called "Dude Ranches." Their hospitality is genuine, spontaneous and personal, far superior to that of an ordinary summer resort. Guests are provided lodging cabins, home cooked ranch meals, horses for riding, and cowboy guides for hiking, riding, fishing and hunting trips.

Most of these ranches are in settings of appealing beauty, with mountains, lakes and streams close at hand. They are found in the Grand Teton and Snowy Range regions of Wyoming, and in equally beautiful and romantic areas of Idaho, Montana, California, Nevada, Oregon and Washington.
