

In the center of the Laramie Plains, 7,200 feet above sea level, the University of Wyoming represents the cultural and educational center of the state. It is Wyoming's only four-year institution of higher education and boasts a registration exceeding 3,500 students with enrollment growing constantly.

Established by law in 1886 and opened in 1887, the University not only comprises eight standard colleges—liberal arts, agriculture, education, engineering, commerce and industry, pharmacy, law, and a graduate school—but also offers training in more than forty specialized vocations and provides field courses in botany, geology, zoology and general science. The University also claims the coolest summer school in the nation.

An ambitious six million dollar building program will include a new agriculture building; an education building; a dormitory for men, and a cafeteria. A one million dollar field house and stadium is presently under construction.

In the sports field, the University of Wyoming is famous for its outstanding basketball teams. An active participant in conference competition for the past thirty years, it has produced four conference championship teams and one world's championship team in seven seasons. As football foes, the "Cowboys" are respected competition, and each season they are becoming stronger contenders for conference championship honors.
