

Portland, the largest city in Oregon, is situated on both banks of the Willamette River near its confluence with the Columbia River.

Favored with an equable year 'round climate, Portland is noted for its promotion and encouragement of outdoor sports and recreation. Practically every sport known to man is enjoyed in this evergreen vacationland. The broad expanses of the Willamette and the Columbia Rivers invite all types of water sports, and deep-sea fishing is popular off the Oregon Coast.

Golf is enjoyed around the calendar and Portland has on several occasions entertained, on its excellent courses, golf tournaments of national and international importance.

Portland is likewise a city of beautiful homes and beautiful city parks; in fact, every section of the city enjoys its own fine parks facilities. Washington Park, on the west side of Portland, about one mile from the business center, is a wooded area of one hundred acres containing the City Zoo and two main city reservoirs. Actually, Portland has 2,260 acres of parks and playgrounds, with an additional 2,500 acres soon to be developed. Altogether, there are 101 parks, large and small and the park properties include three fine municipal golf links.

With so much to offer one seeking outdoors recreation, it is little wonder that Portland and the Pacific Northwest entertain so many of the country's vacationists each year.
