

A welcome relief from the brick and masonry of downtown Los Angeles is the fresh greenery of MacArthur Park not far west from the business district. Formerly known as Westlake Park, it embraces a tree-fringed artificial lake with white-stucco boat-house situated on the east shore.

Los Angeles boasts many fine parks with an excellent connecting boulevard system. Many contain baseball diamonds, bowling greens, bridle and hiking paths, picnic grounds and children's playground equipment, swimming and wading pools. Among the most popular parks are Arroyo Seco Park, Lincoln Park, Griffith Park, Elysian Park, Echo Park and Exposition Park.

Hancock Park which contains the famous La Brea (Tar) Pits, (while not one of the beautiful parks of the city is certainly most unique. Earliest writings about this region mention these bogs with subterranean oil and tar bubbling slowly to the surface. Many skeletons of Ice Age animals and birds have been taken from these pits, indicating the prehistoric existence of the phenomena which served to catch the unwary creature seeking to drink of the film of water which hides the clinging tar beneath. Fossils taken from the La Brea Area are exhibited at the Los Angeles Museum of Science, History and Art in Exposition Park in the southwest section of the city.

Wilshire Boulevard divides MacArthur Park, a 32-acre area situated in one of the most densely populated sections of Los Angeles.
