

The evergreen Pacific Northwest has long been famous for its towering, snow-capped mountains, and its beautiful waterfalls. From the heights of those mountains to the level of the mighty rivers represents a difference of thousands of feet in altitude. Often the streams, formed by the melting snows, in their haste to reach the sea descend precipitously in typical rushing mountain streams. Farther on they cascade down nearly perpendicular mountain sides and rocky flumes, then plunge over the brink of a sheer precipice to fall hundreds of feet, creating a scene of breathtaking beauty.

Perhaps nowhere else on the continent can be found so many of these dainty waterfalls, so closely grouped, as in the verdant Columbia River Gorge. In one eleven-mile section of the Columbia River Highway eleven such magnificent waterfalls may be seen. Most beautiful and famous of these are Multnomah Falls, Wahkeena Falls, Mist Falls, Latourell Falls, and Oneonta Falls.

The Milwaukee Road-Union Pacific trains to and from the Pacific Northwest traverse the scenic Columbia River Gorge for nearly two hundred miles, and many of these picturesque waterfalls may be viewed from the train window.

Graceful Multnomah Falls drops daintily a distance of 620 feet into a tree-fringed bowl sending up a cloud of misty spray.
