

For many decades the people of San Francisco dreamed of a bridge across the narrow channel of the Golden Gate, which separates the Pacific Ocean from San Francisco Bay. Ground was broken in 1933 for the gigantic structure, which was completed in about four years. Built at a cost of $35,000,000, it is one of the longest and most beautiful single-span cable suspension type bridges in the world, and the first ever built across the mouth of a major harbor.

It was originally intended to be painted black, but when it got its coat of red lead to protect it from rust, beauty-loving San Franciscans were so taken with the spectacular color flaming against the blue sky and dark water that it was decided to leave it that way.

Its graceful architecture is a thing of beauty; it has wide driveways to carry the endless traffic between the City and Marin County to the north; and it stands as a fitting monument to the progressive spirit of San Francisco and the Bay Area.

Across the Golden Gate Bridge from San Francisco, in Marin County, is Muir Woods National Monument, noted for its cathedral-like grove of beautiful Redwoods; farther to the north is the famed Redwood Empire.
