

The beautiful municipal, waterfront flower beds of Pacific Grove, California, were started years ago by a Mr. Hayes Perkins. Born in Oregon in 1878, he was shanghaied when a boy and made many trips around the world. When he saw Pacific Grove he decided to spend the remainder of his years beautifying its coastline. Over a period of twelve years, both on his own time and as a city employe, there has been created this area which attracts so many visitors, photographers and painters. The area covers approximately three miles of waterfront with a ground cover of mesembryanthemum (small leaved, small rose-lavender flower commonly called ice plant) which gives the effect of a brilliant carpet during spring and early summer months. Even during autumn and winter months the variety of other flowers attracts artists and tourists.

Pacific Grove is next door to historic Monterey, which, from 1775 to the American occupation in 1846, was the social, military and political capital of old California.

Tourists drive from Monterey to the Pacific Grove waterfront, past Pt. Pinos Lighthouse, to the famed "17 Mile Drive" and on to Carmel-by-the-Sea. Rocky promontories, topped by wind-bent Monterey cypress, pine and gnarled oak, add to the charm of this fascinating peninsula. Here also is Pebble Beach, a "golfing mecca" from which the Bing Crosby golf tournament is telecast nationally each January.

Pacific Grove was founded in 1875 by California Methodists, who bought a quiet pine forest on the peninsula to establish a conference and Chautauqua center. The town is also known for the thousands of Monarch butterflies that migrate there each winter and which are protected by city law.

Brilliant varieties of mesembryanthemum (ice plant) ranging from small lavender to larger pink or red, Achillea, Martha Washington geraniums, Darcena palm tree, summer arctotis, century plant, wild yellow lupin, callas, cannas, veronica, and various wild flowers add infinite variety to this Pacific Grove shoreline. In the distance is Fort Ord (left) and the city of Seaside (right) across Monterey Bay.
