MACKENZIE REACHES THE PACIFIC

Extracts from "Journal of a Voyage Through the North-West Continent of America," by Alexander Mackenzie.

"We landed and found the ruins of a village in a situation calculated for defence. We were soon followed by ten canoes, each of which contained from three to six men".(Indians)

. . . "From their general deportment I was very apprehensive that some hostile design was meditated against us"

. . . "We had no sooner landed than we took possession of a rock, where there was not space for more than twice our number, and which admitted of our defending ourselves with advantage, in case we should be attacked. The people in the first three canoes were the most troublesome, but, after doing their utmost to irritate us, they went away. I now mixed up some vermilion in melted grease, and inscribed in large characters, on the south-east face of the rock on which we had slept last night, this brief memorial:—

ALEXANDER MACKENZIE, FROM CANADA, BY LAND, THE TWENTY-SECOND OF JULY, ONE
THOUSAND SEVEN HUNDRED AND NINETY-THREE.

(The rock upon which this was written was finally located in 1923 by Capt. R. P. Bishop, a trained surveyor in the service of the Land Department of British Columbia, and named Mackenzie's Rock. It is about 75 miles east of Ocean Falls at Bella Coola on the North Bentinck Arm. Mackenzie's writing of course was completely obliterated.)
