Seattle, the Con tinental City

Seattle is not going to be an industrial city alone. Seattle, in nine years, has developed a trade which gives it a place among the large cities of the world. The city is the economic center of the Pacific Northwest, a center of manufacturing, and is a leading trade center for the Northwest. The harbor of Seattle is second in size to New York and Boston.

Seattle has more than 1,500 factories, producing a variety of products, with a combined capital of more than $500,000,000. The city is the industrial center of the Northwest, and is a leading trade center for the region.

Seattle is a city of parks and playgrounds, with more than 700 parks, playgrounds, and public gardens. The city is also a center of recreational activities, with a variety of outdoor activities available for visitors.

Seattle is a city of art and culture, with a variety of museums, galleries, and theaters. The city is also a center of education, with a variety of schools and universities.

Seattle is a city of transportation, with a variety of modes of transportation available for visitors, including air, train, and road.

Seattle is a city of beauty, with a variety of natural features, including the Puget Sound, the Olympic Mountains, and the Cascade Mountains.

Seattle is a city of history, with a variety of historical sites and landmarks, including the Alki Point Lighthouse, the Seattle Art Museum, and the Seattle Opera House.

Seattle is a city of innovation, with a variety of innovations, including the Seattle Center, the Space Needle, and the Seattle Seahawks.

Seattle is a city of diversity, with a variety of ethnic and cultural groups, including Asian, African American, Hispanic, and Native American.

Seattle is a city of growth, with a variety of development projects, including the Seattle Center and the
Seattle Opera House.

Seattle is a city of hope, with a variety of community programs and initiatives, including the Seattle Arts and Culture Commission,
the Seattle
Community Development Commission,
and the Seattle
United Neighborhood
Commission.
Seattle: the Gateway to the Orient

In WASHINGTON, about one part of our Pacific North-West coast, there is a city--Seattle--so full of interest and adventure as to almost exceed belief. Nowhere else can one so quickly and so thoroughly become acquainted with the beauty of nature's gifts with which this great land is endowed. And nowhere is there a finer and more charming home for men. To be a citizen of Seattle, a citizen of the world, is to be a friend of history. The land, the city, the people, are the result of centuries of man's struggle with nature, the struggle by which man has won the trackless plains of the West for himself. Seattle has been the leader in this field.

For, truly, it is here that the craving for adventure first realized itself. There is a certain grace and beauty about Seattle, a certain splendor, which can be found nowhere else. The city stands on a bluff overlooking Puget Sound. It is not only a city of commerce, but a city of homes, where the every-day man owns his home. Seattle's residential district, which will at once present to the visitor a spectacle of unceasing activity, is a lure to her climate which is an unending source of delight.

Seattle has a vigorous, healthful climate. The average daily summer temperature is 41 degrees. The bracing salt sea air, the freedom from extremes of heat and cold, the unlimited supply of pure water from the Cascades all contribute toward making Seattle known the world over as a healthful place in which to live. The contrast which it today offers is a mighty commentary on the industry and ideals of man.

Seattle is a capital of industry. It is the gateway to Alaska and the Panama Canal. It is the first city of the West. It is the city of homes where the every-day man owns his home.

Seattle: the Gateway to the Orient

* * *

Only a Generation Old

To us, Seattle is not a city of yesterday. It is a city of today. It is a city of tomorrow. It was not a short time ago that Seattle was a stump, that the area now occupied by the city was a wilderness. For, truly, it is here that the craving for adventure realized itself. There is a certain grace and beauty about Seattle, a certain splendor, which can be found nowhere else. The city stands on a bluff overlooking Puget Sound. It is not only a city of commerce, but a city of homes, where the every-day man owns his home. Seattle's residential district, which will at once present to the visitor a spectacle of unceasing activity, is a lure to her climate which is an unending source of delight.

Seattle has a vigorous, healthful climate. The average daily summer temperature is 41 degrees. The bracing salt sea air, the freedom from extremes of heat and cold, the unlimited supply of pure water from the Cascades all contribute toward making Seattle known the world over as a healthful place in which to live. The contrast which it today offers is a mighty commentary on the industry and ideals of man.

Seattle is a capital of industry. It is the gateway to Alaska and the Panama Canal. It is the first city of the West. It is the city of homes where the every-day man owns his home.

Seattle: the Gateway to the Orient

* * *

Envisageable Public Markets

Such a city realism, necessarily, selfish love is a necessity of the world. People are more prone to spend money than to save it. Seattle's residential district, which will at once present to the visitor a spectacle of unceasing activity, is a lure to her climate which is an unending source of delight.

Seattle has a vigorous, healthful climate. The average daily summer temperature is 41 degrees. The bracing salt sea air, the freedom from extremes of heat and cold, the unlimited supply of pure water from the Cascades all contribute toward making Seattle known the world over as a healthful place in which to live. The contrast which it today offers is a mighty commentary on the industry and ideals of man.

Seattle is a capital of industry. It is the gateway to Alaska and the Panama Canal. It is the first city of the West. It is the city of homes where the every-day man owns his home.

Seattle: the Gateway to the Orient

* * *

A Vigorous, Healthful Climate

One of the things which will at once present to the visitor a spectacle of unceasing activity, is a lure to her climate which is an unending source of delight.

Seattle has a vigorous, healthful climate. The average daily summer temperature is 41 degrees. The bracing salt sea air, the freedom from extremes of heat and cold, the unlimited supply of pure water from the Cascades all contribute toward making Seattle known the world over as a healthful place in which to live. The contrast which it today offers is a mighty commentary on the industry and ideals of man.

Seattle is a capital of industry. It is the gateway to Alaska and the Panama Canal. It is the first city of the West. It is the city of homes where the every-day man owns his home.

Seattle: the Gateway to the Orient

* * *

Travel to Seattle on the Homer-Georgia and the L. & N. South Coast Limited